Since our founding in 1919—a time when the Middle East was called the Orient—we have been a leading research center for the study of ancient civilizations.

In uncovering the past, we raise questions that are just as relevant in the present. How did the first societies forge connections? How did they understand the world and cosmos around them? How did they balance autonomy, diversity, and unity?

With 350,000 artifacts, excavated mainly by our own archaeologists, the OI Museum offers a glimpse into the beginnings of our lives as humans together. Look into the ancient past, and you may see reflections of the present: the struggle to create a collective identity and the determination that makes us human.
